dispute could be outside the pale of araction. He reviewed the question in all aspects since 1814.

Mr. William Alian (Advanced Radical), member for Gateshead, then seconded the amendment. The whole matter, he declared, was a tempest in a teacup. Gold, as usual, was at the bottom of the trouble. Mr. L. Atheriey-Jones (Radical), member for Nortiwest Durham, moved an amendment to the address in reply to the Queen's speech deploring the absence from the speech from the Throne of an assurance that the whole boundary dispute with Venezuela will be referred to arbitration, in accordance with the suggestion of the United States.

Sir William Vernon-Harcourt, the Liberal leader in the House, said he was glad that the amendment had been moved in the interest of arbitration, but he did not think he could insist that the amendment was the best way to attain the end in view. Of course, such an amendment could not he accepted by the Government, and must, if pressed to a division, be lost by a large majority. If that happened it would go forth to America that the House had pronounced against arbitration, although he was convinced that that was the end that all wished to be attained. (Cries of "Hear! all wished to be attained. (Cries of "Hear!" Hear!").

Every effort ought to be made to remove all causes of irritation. He trusted that no further delay would occur, and that everything would be done to bring about a speedy settlement. Sir William further said that the points of difference between Great Britain and the United States were insignificant, and could easily be settled by the Cabinets of both countries, but if the populace on both sides were allowed to raise excitement through ignorance of the real matters at issue there would be great danger of strife. He appealed to Mr. Atherley-Jones to withdraw his amendment, which was done, the Speaker checking an attempt on the part of the Irish members to continue the discussion.

SEARCHING FOR PEARL BRYAN'S HEAD.

The above scene represents a squad of four men delving in the muck at the bottom of the canal in Cincinnati, where it has been believed the murdered woman's head was thrown. The crowd which is intently watching the work from the Main street bridge followed the searchers along the banks as the men progressed. From a letter contained in dispatches from Indianapolis to-day it is thought that the head may now be found in the Licking River.
